

to decide a future

Attendees at the conference listen to the speakers and make notes system, rather than the system itself. There needs to be a way of councillors making the decisions consulting with people in the street and finding out what they want. Instead of making decisions for them, the council should be making decisions with them." But Coun Ed Nash, who represents St Annes on Fylde Council and is a town councillor for the area, said if there was a referendum on the issue, it would increase council tax bills to pay for it. He added: "It would go on forever." It's thought the cost of a referendum would be more than £100,000.
